The Arch of Constantine is a triumphal arch, situated between the Colosseum and the Palatine Hill. It was erected to commemorate Constantine I's victory over Maxentius at the Battle of Milvian Bridge on October 28, 312. Dedicated in 315, it is the latest of the existing triumphal arches in Rome, from which it differs by spolia, the extensive re-use of parts of earlier buildings.
Venice square takes its name from the adjacent Palazzo Venezia. The piazza is at the foot of the Capitoline Hill and near the Roman Forum. It is dominated by the imposing Monument to Vittorio Emanuele II, a monument to honour Victor Emmanuel, the first king of a unified Italy. The monument holds the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier with an eternal flame, built under the statue of Italy after World War I following an idea of General Giulio Douhet.
Imperial Forums built in the last days of the Republic, when the roman Forum became inadequate to accommodate the growing population, these forums added to the magnificence of the city (which now was the capital of the world). Following Caesar, Augustus (32 bc), Vespasian (69-75 ad), Domitian (97 ad), Trajan (113 ad) and Hadrian added new forums. During the middle ages and the renaissance this monumental area degenerated into a heap of ruins gradually becoming buried under the soil. When the excavations begun in 1924, fragments of the temples scattered in the area came to light.
The Colosseum, originally called Flavian Amphitheatre, it is an elliptical amphitheatre, the largest ever built in the Roman Empire. One of the greatest works of Roman architecture and Roman engineering. The building ceased to be used for entertainment in the early medieval era. It was later reused for such purposes as housing, workshops, quarters for a religious order, a fortress, a quarry, manure deposite, stables and a Christian shrine. It has been estimated that about 500,000 people and over a million wild animals died in the Colosseum games.
